his own at the forthcoming sale. In the foreign contingent the few old Time Curtain Rises To-day pictures shown are of no great consequence, though one of them, the "Birds of the Farmyard," by Hondecoeter, is a bandsome bit of seventeenth century Dutch decoration. The really interesting pictures here begin with the Barbizon group, which is represented by several characteristic pieces, and then come many skturesque illustrations of modern European taste and adroitness in the painting of costume subjects. One of the best things in the show is Kuhl's "Conno sear," a pleasing little panel, with a much more sensitive technique in it than o expects of the ordinary German traditito which it belongs. Another arresting bit of mere painting is "Le Bateau Vapeur," by Alfred Stevens. This cel brated Belgian painted in his time son finer surfaces, but the picture is neverth less significant of his individualized git There are sufficiently numerous space mens of the "cloak and sword" polished works by Zamacols, Charl-Melssonier, Paul Viry, and the like, n the cult for pretty women in pret clethes is duly accounted for in two typ cal pictures by the Dutch Frederik Kaen merer. From his even more noted cod trymen, Bastert, Blommers and Mauv there are also some admirable thing One of the distinctly salient figures paradoxically, Ernest Jean Aubert, t Frenchman whose talent was peculiar delicate and poetic. "Cupid's Magic Lat tern" is one of the most charming things he ever painted. The connoisseur who is not afraid of a painted anecdote rimply make a special note of this graceful fancy, and, we may observe in passing, he will also give some attention to the small and kindred picture by Jean Louis Hamon, "Love's Whisperings." But we might go on indefinitely citing these minor yet still artistic productions. The collection may have a slightly old-fashioned atmosphere, but it is full of genuinely interesting stuff.

while this exhibition is going on two others may also be seen at the American Art Galleries. One is composed of Oriental porceiains belonging to an anonymous amateur, and contains over five hundred pieces. We have noted some good examples of hime and white and a fairly large humber of fine single color glazes. This collection will be sold on the afternoons of March 19, 29 and 21. The sale is now going forward here of the Americana collected by the late O. H. Marshall and added to by his son. The catalogue runs to more than a thousand numbers and cubraces books, manuscripts, documents and autographs.
